In 2001, PM asked its consulting editors to each select 25 DPMs whom they thought were the most influential. What emerged was a virtual Who’s Who of podiatry. This diverse group ranges from well-known legends to up-and-coming superstars. They represent a cross-section of the country and some of the brightest lights in the profession.

We decided to repeat this process every five years. This time, we also asked the readers of PM News, our Internet newsletter, to nominate additional podiatrists who might have been overlooked in the difficult selection process. We have not listed some legendary podiatrists because they are no longer active in the profession. Their hard work and devotion have illuminated this profession and they serve as role models for all of us.

Abbreviations are used for commonly known colleges of podiatric medicine and well known organizations. For example, APMA = American Podiatric Medical Association. Colleges graduated from are listed by the current college name. For example, graduates of the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine are listed as TUSPM (Temple University School of Podiatric Medicine).

Movers and Shakers

America’s Most Influential Podiatrists—Part 2

In 2001, PM asked its consulting editors to each select 25 DPMs whom they thought were the most influential. What emerged was a virtual Who’s Who of podiatry. This diverse group ranges from well-known legends to up-and-coming superstars. They represent a cross-section of the country and some of the brightest lights in the profession.

We decided to repeat this process every five years. This time, we also asked the readers of PM News, our Internet newsletter, to nominate additional podiatrists who might have been overlooked in the difficult selection process. We have not listed some legendary podiatrists because they are no longer active in the profession. Their legacies, however, will live on eternally in the PM Podiatry Hall of Fame.

We’ve listed a short curriculum vitae for each honoree. This is a condensation of current and past positions, publications, and notable achievements and is based on information submitted by each podiatrist. We commend those who were selected. Their hard work and devotion have illuminated this profession and they serve as role models for all of us.

Abbreviations are used for commonly-known colleges of podiatric medicine and well known organizations. For example, APMA = American Podiatric Medical Association. Colleges graduated from are listed by the current college name. For example, graduates of the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine are listed as TUSPM (Temple University School of Podiatric Medicine).
